Thanks to the technology, you can now dodge an attacker, and then run into their tackle without them being able to respond. Players are also able to make more dynamic, flowing moves around the pitch. Taking advantage of your new attacking moves and running skills, you can quickly weave between players in midair and create space for your teammates. Whether you're a defender, midfielder or striker, new attacking moves will offer a sense of escalation and more creative freedom.

Additional Features Altered calcium homeostasis and calcium-dependent processes in the striatum of calmodulin and calpain knockout mice. Calmodulin (CaM) and calpains are calcium-dependent enzymes that are localized to dendritic spines, and may play critical roles in the modulation of synapse structure and function. Given their widespread localization in the brain, these proteins have been implicated in a variety of physiological processes including excitatory synaptic transmission, spatial learning, memory and neurological disorders. To assess the roles of CaM and calpains in CNS function, we have characterized the anatomical distribution and abundance of CaM and calpains in the brains of the mouse. In the striatum, CaM and calpains are found in synaptic plasma membranes and dendritic spines, and show wide anatomic distribution. Whereas CaM is expressed at relatively high levels in the olfactory bulb and hippocampus, both CaM and calpains are abundant in the striatum. Both CaM and calpain activity are altered in the striatum of calmodulin knockout (CALM-KO) mice. In response to large depolarizing K(+)-induced depolarization, there is a significant reduction in CaM-dependent Ca(2+)-activated I(Na) in CALM-KO compared to wild-type control. Moreover, the amplitude and kinetics of the Ca(2+) response to application of acetylcholine are significantly increased in striatal neurons from CALM-KO mice. In addition, we have shown that the rate of exocytosis of neurotransmitter-containing vesicles is increased in the absence of CaM. The rate of exocytosis is modestly decreased by the addition of calpain inhibitor calpeptin, suggesting a direct role for calpain in neurotransmitter release. Given the large influence CaM has on a variety of calcium-dependent processes, this study further supports the important role of CaM in physiology

Cholangiocyte hyperplasia and biliary dysplasia in patients with idiopathic jaundice. The liver is a vital organ involved in a variety of pathologic processes, including biliary and hepatic diseases. The pathophysiologic factors regulating hepatic growth are thought to be related to portal insulin or biliary hormones. Chronic biliary obstruction (CBO), a common cause of idiopathic jaundice, leads to cholangiocyte hyperplasia and biliary epithelial dysplasia. In an effort to further study the pathophysiologic effects of biliary obstruction on cholangiocytes, we examined cholangiocyte proliferation and biliary epithelial dysplasia in patients with idiopathic jaundice. Patients with idiopathic chronic or acute cholestatic jaundice (n = 23) were compared with controls (normal liver biopsy specimens; n = 10). Cholangiocyte proliferation was assessed using MIB-1 antibody, and microarray analysis was performed to detect alterations in the gene expression profile of cholangiocytes from patients with idiopathic jaundice. Results were compared with those from patients with hepatocarcinogenesis-associated cholangiocarcinoma (i.e., hepatocholangiocarcinoma). MIB-1 antigen labeling and cholangiocyte proliferation were both significantly greater in patients with idiopathic cholestatic jaundice than in controls. Microarray analysis of cholangiocytes demonstrated altered expression of genes associated with G2 cell cycle progression and protein transport. Microarray data were confirmed by quantitative polymerase chain reaction (Q-PCR) analysis. Cholangiocyte proliferation, as measured by MIB-1, was significantly increased in patients with idiopathic cholestatic jaundice compared with controls. Our results demonstrate that cholangiocytes from patients with idiopathic cholestatic j
