Nos. 4,069,526; 4,101,328; 4,128,946; 4,208,747; 4,401,429; and 4,416,194, the prior art is replete with myriad and diverse anti-friction mechanisms for use with bicycles. While all of the aforementioned prior art constructions are more than adequate for the basic purpose and function for which they have been specifically designed, these patented devices have generally been complex, expensive, and are not conveniently transportable. As a consequence of the foregoing situation, there has existed a longstanding need for a new and improved manner of adjusting a bicycle-type wheelie bar in an effective, effective manner, and the provision of such a construction is a stated objective of the present invention. "For your own good...": voices and visions in early modern print medicine This seminar will explore the complex narrative of print medicine in a tradition that was increasingly binding the interests and desires of the wealthy and powerful in early modern Europe. From talk, book and pamphlet catalogues to medical teaching, print culture offered new kinds of visions, voices and ways of seeing - of self, of self-making, of distancing. Could print and visual culture offer new forms of knowledge and experience of early modern bodies and sickness? Speaker's bio: Beverley Southwell is Senior Lecturer in the History of Medicine, University of Bristol, and co-editor of the Journal of British Studies. Her research focuses on early modern print culture, the history of smallpox and plague, and the study of women's and gender's
