There is an.Q: SVN post-commit hook needs to run on all branches I have a post commit hook in my svn repository that has to run on all branches. I have got this to work fine.

However I notice it runs even for branch names that are untracked. Is this the correct behavior or does it need to be changed? I have some more requirements here. The post-commit hook needs to run under the repository user. The post-commit hook needs to run only for repositories that are under 'svn:eol-style=native'. Can anyone help with this please? A: Like I mentioned in the comments, post-commit hooks run as the repository user, so it's no problem if you're running it as the repository user. The native svn:eol-style setting will only make sure that the hook runs on repositories where the format is native. You can check the svn command-line help for more details: //=====
