I also realized that for every person who thinks they need to upgrade to take advantage of new tools, there are others who don't. They are good enough with what they have, and are happy with the tools they have. Those people probably just need to upgrade their monitors to match their current tools.

p.s. A great photographer friend of mine who has transitioned into the world of product photography from film studies recently rented a Canon 5D Mark II and described it as a great new tool that provided many choices. What really impressed him though were the choices available with post processing on a MacBook Pro. He said that all those choices were in his toolset and available at his fingertips. His new tool was equal to the tools he had at his disposal before, but with more choices. The lesson is important not only for photographers.

The Windows is not booting. While using Windows 8, It struggles to load and some times it displays a blue screen of death (BSOD). Do your research, then do it again and again. You will know when you have lost your device forever. On 32-bit and 64-bit Windows 7, the format setting is not shown in the control panel. There is no fix error to allow you to fix it. However, there is an option in the registry key, called.Net. You can change the format to FAT if you want, but the problem may come back when Windows and Photoshop are updated. The solution is quite simple. You must open the Regedit utility and delete the undesired registry key.
